2026 ANNUAL REPORT

CATHOLIC CHARITIES

CHERISHING THE DIVINE WITHIN ALL

Dear Brothers and Sisters in Christ,

With profound gratitude, I reflect on another year in which Catholic Charities has answered Christ's call with compassion, courage and an unwavering mission of mercy. At a time when the needs of our neighbors are changing, and often becoming more urgent, this outreach bears powerful witness to the love of Christ made visible in our midst.

I was especially grateful to join Catholic Charities in May for the opening of the Carolyn E. Fugett Intergenerational Center in West Baltimore. Carolyn Fugett believed deeply in the difference one person can make, and this remarkable center carries forward her legacy of faith, service and hope. Rooted in more than a decade of relationship-building, the Fugett Center brings generations together through Head Start classrooms, Success Academies, workforce development, food pantry, youth programming and expanded support for families and older adults.

That same commitment to meeting our neighbors where they live guides Catholic Charities' other ministries as well. At the Esperanza Center, immigrants find welcome, practical assistance, and compassionate accompaniment as they build new lives and strengthen our communities. Through Gallagher Services, adults with intellectual and developmental disabilities are finding expanded opportunities to live with dignity, participate in community life, and realize their God-given potential.

Additionally, as newly implemented federal SNAP and Medicaid protocols affect those we serve, Catholic Charities is enhancing efforts that help clients overcome barriers, gain skills, secure employment and move toward greater stability and self-sufficiency.

Further, in our schools, behavioral health initiatives provided by Catholic Charities are strengthening student well-being and creating conditions in which young people can learn and flourish. Catholic Charities is, likewise, addressing the growing housing needs of older adults, helping seniors find the security, community and dignity they deserve as they age.

Though seemingly distinct and divergent, these efforts of charitable outreach, and so many others, are tethered to one enduring commitment: recognizing our neighbors' changing needs and responding to those needs with Christ's love. I pray the Holy Spirit will continue to enliven the mission of Catholic Charities and guide our faithful partners like you who sustain it.

My heartfelt thanks go to Dave Kinkopf, Executive Director, and all who generously share their time, talent and treasure in support of Catholic Charities. Through your service, Christ's love remains vibrant and at work among us.

Faithfully in Christ,

Most Reverend William E. Lori
ARCHBISHOP OF BALTIMORE

Dear Friends,

As I reflect on my first year as Executive Director of Catholic Charities, I am filled with gratitude and a renewed sense of how we can best love our neighbors. This year has reminded me again and again that our work is never something we do alone. We do it together.

We feel the impact of growing needs and changing governmental policies, but because of your support, we were there when Marylanders needed us most. When changes to SNAP left families worried about how they would put food on the table, our staff helped connect them with food, resources and a path forward. When extreme weather put people at risk, Weinberg Housing and Resource Center opened its doors, providing shelter, meals and a safe place to find support. These are more than services. They are moments when someone who is worried, overwhelmed or unsure where to turn finds a person ready to help.

We also know that loving our neighbors means investing in what comes next. This year, we opened the innovative Carolyn E. Fugett Intergenerational Center in West Baltimore after years of listening to the community and imagining what could be possible. Today, a child learns in Head Start, a young person explores a career, individuals and families receive mental health support, and generations gather and build relationships around food, recreation, and enrichment activities…all in one place.

The Wilson family, featured on the cover of this report, is part of that Fugett community. At the center's ribbon cutting, Deonte Wilson took the ceremonial first shot on the basketball court. It was a joyful moment, and it represented something much bigger: a family and a community helping bring a shared vision to life. The center shows what can happen when we invest in people and create opportunities that can reach generations.

And when fear and uncertainty grew among our immigrant neighbors, we stood with them. At the Esperanza Center, thousands receive immigration legal assistance, health care, English classes or simply a trusted answer to the question, "What do I do next?" We want every person to know: You are welcome here. You are not alone.

These moments reflect what our Catholic faith calls us to do–to see the dignity in every person and put that faith into action. I am grateful to witness that calling lived out every day by our staff, volunteers, donors, partners and the neighbors we serve.

That is what Together in Action means. It is a family finding food when times are hard. A neighbor finding shelter and support. A child discovering possibility. An immigrant finding a trusted place to turn. A community coming together to build something lasting.

As I begin my second year, I am more certain than ever that our greatest strength is the community we build together. The needs around us will continue to change, but our commitment will remain: to serve Marylanders in need with dignity, compassion and excellence.

Together, we are building community where everyone has the opportunity to reach their God-given potential. We are rooted in faith, planting seeds of hope, and putting love into action.

With gratitude,

Dave Kinkopf

Supporting families TOGETHER

While some students might head to school excited or nervous, Nestor Soriano, 11, faced the school day with crippling anxiety. "I used to feel sick at school and didn't want to attend. My mom used to take me to hospitals and stuff, and they basically said I didn't have anything," he says. When Nestor's anxiety impacted his attendance, his mother, Ana Garcia Morales, says his elementary school referred the family to the Family Care Coordination (FCC) program operated by Villa Maria Behavioral Health.

FCC is a grant-funded program implemented through the Maryland Consortium on Coordinated Community Supports as part of the Blueprint for Maryland's Future–a 2021 law passed to transform the state's public education. That turnaround plan acknowledged the need to have mental health and wraparound services to help students like Nestor succeed. "While the program aims to tackle issues of truancy, families are also linked to important supports like food, medical, and mental health services," says Nikki Dozier, clinical supervisor of the program.

Now in its third year operating in Frederick County, FCC has served 68 families and children from 12 schools, and 63 percent showed improved attendance in the most recent quarter. "We also have grants to provide FCC in Anne Arundel and Baltimore counties, and our outcomes are similar," says Dozier. "Families that participate in the program for two or more quarters typically will show improved school attendance and often improvement in grades and attitude toward school."

For Nestor, the experience was life-changing. "Nestor has become more engaged in school, improved his attendance, and gained access to academic, emotional, and therapy services support," says his mother, speaking through her family care coordinator, Monica Mendoza. Morales adds that therapy received through FCC helped Nestor build coping skills and manage his anxiety. "And as a family, we feel more connected to school staff and community services and better prepared to address challenges."

> "I'm excited about getting back to school now."

Morales explains that FCC utilizes a family-centered approach, designed to help them identify barriers and connect them with supports that make regular attendance possible: "The program takes its time to understand each student and family's unique challenges. The care coordinator works closely with the family and school to develop solutions." She adds that access to bilingual service providers has improved communication and helped the family feel better supported.

Nestor, who enjoys soccer and math, is excited to be starting middle school. "I feel like talking to someone and strategizing stuff to do at school when my anxiety gets up helped me a lot," he explains. "I'm excited about getting back to school now that I don't have the problems that I used to have with my anxiety, and I'm going to be relieved not having that stress on my back."

We Do More TOGETHER

Villa Maria Behavioral Health brings behavioral health and family support directly into schools, helping children navigate challenges, strengthen well-being, and build the tools to thrive. Through school-based programs at more than 100 schools across the state, VMBH makes care more accessible to children and families, where and when they need it most.

Building lives of purpose TOGETHER

his youth as a troublesome time. He was a ward of the state from the time he was three and spent time in the 1990s at Villa Maria School and St. Vincent's Villa. In high school, "I got into alcohol, which I thought was cool, and smoking marijuana. I wanted to party instead of educating myself," he remembers. It was a path that led to unemployment and homelessness.

Now 39, he explains that he tried different programs to get on his feet, but they were never the right fit, and he was never fully in the right mindset. That changed when he saw a friend he knew through another residential program who had successfully graduated from Christopher Place Employment Academy. "What convinced me was the enthusiasm he had about [Christopher Place]… letting me know the things that they do as far as allowing you to save your money, really giving you a restart button in life. He bought a new vehicle from the showroom floor to having his own apartment and just being mentally sound and well, and I said, 'Man, I want a piece of that.'"

At Christopher Place, men are able to access housing, hard and soft skill training, health assessments, GED preparation, and more. Through a partnership with Villa Maria Behavioral Health, nearly 90 percent of participants access vital supports, including for substance use. Christopher Place residents can move from homelessness to permanent housing, employment, and a substance-free life.

Unlike at previous programs, at Christopher Place Hancock found success.

"It was structured. It was well organized. They dress you in suits. They help you get back to society," he says, adding that there's a real sense of love and care among the staff–as well as accountability–which keeps program participants on track. "Supporting programs like this is important because you have lost souls that have come to their bitter end, and they're looking for refuge. And this program provides. They provide it holistically from mental health to physical health to spiritual health, and education as well."

"I want to enjoy the fruits of life."

Hancock says he's left the program stronger–and continues to grow in strength every day. Where once he described himself as combative, he now says he's both a gentle giant and a lighthouse–a beacon of hope for others to see. He currently has three jobs, and while people often ask him when he sleeps, he likes his full schedule, especially when he's promoting Christopher Place to others. "Service is critical because it keeps me grounded," he says. "It also allows me to play my tape back, reminding me that I could easily be in the same position as the people I come across.

"I know what that pain feels and looks like," he continues. "I experienced it too many times, and I'm tired of feeling that pain. I want to enjoy the fruits of life."

We Do More TOGETHER

Weinberg Housing and Resource Center, Baltimore City's largest shelter, offers year-round shelter, safety, and care for people experiencing homelessness. During winter Code Blue alerts, its doors provide warmth and refuge; in summer, cooling stations offer relief from dangerous heat. In 2026, WHRC served 657 residents with a 98% shelter bed utilization rate.

Caring for seniors TOGETHER

For Elva E. Radcliff,

73, leaving her home meant more than a change of address. Living independently in her apartment, she'd started having falls that exacerbated her already bad knees. Unable to walk, her family moved her to St. Elizabeth's rehabilitation center and then to Caritas Assisted Living. When she arrived, she could no longer recognize herself as the charismatic, independent woman she once was–a woman of faith, a wife and mother to her birth son and several children she took under her wing, and a financial analyst who spent over three decades working for the federal government.

At Caritas, "Miss Elva," as she's known, found a staff she describes as "unwavering and consistent" in their support. With their help and care, she made the intentional decision not to let her poor health define her. She's now almost completely independent, able to engage in the exercise classes offered at Caritas, and a regular at the once-weekly Bible study. From her homey room, decorated with family photos and personal mementos, she works on her passion project–writing and disseminating inspirational messages via text message to a list of over 75 people.

"I have regained my dignity, my self-respect–and my self-esteem has soared," she says. "Most importantly, I found Elva. Through this journey, I feared I'd lost myself."

She says she's also gained a family among the staff and residents of Caritas House. Were she still in her apartment, she would need daily help. And it would be a lonelier life than the engaging one she's found. "Sometimes I stop, pause, look around at the staff and residents, and my room with photos of loved ones and I get such a feeling of contentment. Of peace. Of peace of mind. That can be difficult to attain."

"My self-esteem has soared."

The experience of living at Caritas, she explains, is embodied in the translation of its Latin name–caritas means care, charity and love, all things she's found in her new home. It shows up in small acts of kindness, like the staff person who helps remove the plastic packaging from meal items, understanding that is difficult for her to do herself with arthritic hands. And it shows up in meaningful ways, like when she recently had a difficult time on her husband's birthday–he passed in 2020–and a member of staff sat with her and supported her through a time of profound grief.

Ms. Elva has been on a journey and believes the only time you look back is to see how far you've come. "Today, through the grace of God and the incredible staff here, I'm living proof that God is faithful and hard work does pay off."

We Do More TOGETHER

Catholic Charities' Senior Communities are places to live, connect and thrive. Through wellness programs, creative classes, social activities and supportive services, residents find friendship, purpose and opportunities to remain active and independent. In one year, our service coordination team helped residents access more than 52,000 services–from healthcare and benefits to food, home management and support to prevent isolation–helping older adults live with greater stability, connection and peace of mind.

Enabling lives of dignity TOGETHER

Anne Mergehenn has a smile that can light up a room.

In the entrance foyer of DePaul House, one of Catholic Charities' senior living communities, she chats with friends and offers hugs. At 74, Mergehenn has spent over three decades of her life utilizing Gallagher Services for those with intellectual and development disabilities. Gallagher Services supports more than 200 adults to live the life of their choice – with meaningful day supports, employment opportunities, and community living.

"I lived at my mother and father's house, then at Rockhaven," says Mergehenn. Rockhaven is the home where she lived and received community living supports from Gallagher Services that her parents selected when they grew concerned about what would happen to their daughter as they aged. Mergehenn lived there for 37 years, during which time she worked at a uniform factory and met a lifelong friend, Rose Parr.

More than three years ago, she moved to an apartment at DePaul House that gives her the smaller space and privacy she wanted as she got older. "I go downstairs by myself, I have my own key, I know my way around, I can stay in my house alone for six hours," she explains, adding that she likes to check her mailbox and has her own cell phone. Her apartment is immaculately tidy with photos of family, her friend Rose, and her boyfriend's mother in her bedroom. In a corner of her living area, an iridescent pink rolling suitcase is packed and ready for her upcoming cruise to Bermuda.

At DePaul, Mergehenn is located very close to the St. Anne's day program, which she attends Monday through Friday, enjoying crafts, playing cards with friends, and going on outings (she never misses a trip to Golden Corral). On Saturdays, "I like to relax and go downstairs and have a hot dog and a snowball," she says, a reference to seasonal activities for residents like cookouts in summer and Ravens watch parties in the fall. With her support staff, Zenia Butler, Mergehenn goes to the library, bowling, and shopping for clothes and her own food.

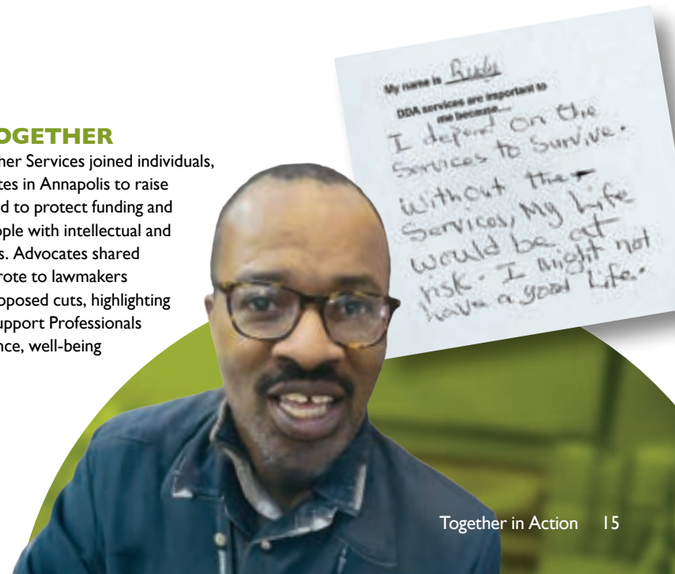

She is someone who likes to have fun, dancing to "the oldies but goodies," eating good food, and spending time with the friends she's made. She loves travel, especially cruises. "I've never got seasick," she adds.

"I go downstairs by myself, I have my own key, I know my way around…"

Mergehenn's good humor is infectious. Recently, she encouraged another, more reticent resident at DePaul to join her downstairs for some socializing. Now that resident can often be seen out of her apartment socializing with others. At a time in life when seniors often deal with isolation, Mergehenn's kind spirit has an important role to play in her community.

We Do More TOGETHER

In February 2026, Gallagher Services joined individuals, families, staff and advocates in Annapolis to raise awareness about the need to protect funding and essential services for people with intellectual and developmental disabilities. Advocates shared personal experiences, wrote to lawmakers and spoke out against proposed cuts, highlighting the vital role of Direct Support Professionals in supporting independence, well-being and quality of life.

Creating community TOGETHER

For many families in Baltimore, simply finding a safe place for their children to play basketball can be difficult. So when Deonte Wilson Jr. and his family attended the grand opening of the Carolyn E. Fugett Intergenerational Center, the basketball courts–both indoor and outdoor–captured his attention. As a 16-year-old junior at Digital Harbor High School, it's no surprise he wants somewhere to shoot hoops. Thanks to a partnership between Catholic Charities and PeacePlayers, he can enjoy basketball while also learning about leadership and community-building.

"What I like about the PeacePlayers program is that it's a safe environment and it's doing the sport I like, basketball, and it's a fun place for everyone," says Deonte.

His mother, Monica Wilson, says they were thrilled with what they saw at the center's grand opening. "We don't live in the best neighborhood and as a parent, I'm always going to come back to it being a safe place," she says. "He's always happy on the court so to have something two blocks up the street that I feel comfortable he can walk to–that's important."

The Fugett Intergenerational Center opened in spring 2026, a 55,000-square-foot facility on a 3.5-acre campus on Baltimore City's westside. But it is far more than a building. It is a place where children, teens, working adults, and older adults come together around programs and community.

Deonte and his siblings all enjoy playing basketball on the courts, while his mother can take the younger children to the playground where she connects with other parents. During the school year, Deonte–the eldest of eight children–use the WiFi and classroom space for quiet study away from the distraction of younger siblings.

"He's a really good kid with awesome grades so it really means a lot to me to have a fun, safe space for him, especially to focus his studies," says Monica.

The center also brings together programs and partners that might not otherwise share a common space, creating opportunities to address different needs while supporting the whole person and the whole community.

PeacePlayers is one example. The local chapter of the national program uses sports to help youth ages eight to 18 build leadership skills, strengthen community ties and navigate challenges. As a resident program in the center–which also houses Baltimore City's largest Head Start program–PeacePlayers was well positioned to build a meaningful partnership between the two organizations.

"Head Start has a very strong presence in the building with nine classrooms and 75 Head Start children," says Denine Rafus, director of Head Start programs. "For us to collaborate and expose those families that already have children enrolled in our after-school programs just made sense."

Together, the two organizations created a curriculum that engages the center's youngest kids, who would otherwise be too young for PeacePlayers-specific programs. Rafus says students will leave the program with improved social readiness for elementary school.

Partnerships like this are exactly what the Fugett Intergenerational Center was designed to make possible: bringing people and organizations together to create new opportunities for the community. And in many ways, what happens at the center is a window into the much broader work of Catholic Charities, consistently serving alongside people and communities. For Monica, the impact is already visible in her son.

"I've seen so much growth in [Deonte] since he's been there," she says. "I've seen him kind of light up a little bit more."

We Do More TOGETHER

The kitchen at the Fugett Intergenerational Center, presented by McCormick & Company, Inc., gives Requity Foundation students hands-on experience in culinary arts while building skills and confidence for their futures. Through programs in culinary arts, business and construction, Requity provides meaningful opportunities to prepare for careers. Requity students also provide catering support for programs and events at the center, putting their skills into action.

Providing access to care TOGETHER

provides community services for immigrants, including legal assistance, education and healthcare. While the center has always worked to ensure that critical programs and services are accessible to our newest neighbors, that mission has become more acute in light of new immigration enforcement.

Snehal Shah, medical director, explains that for immigrant patients, leaving home for an appointment, waiting at a bus stop, going to a pharmacy or even taking a walk outdoors have become vulnerable activities. And when ICE is known to be active in the community, people do not come for their scheduled appointments.

Fear of coming to the center is showing up in the number of patients who miss appointments. The show rate has dropped from 65 percent to as low as 50 percent. This has a direct impact on health, says Shah, especially as many patients live with chronic conditions such as diabetes.

She points to a 55-year-old male patient with uncontrolled diabetes, largely because he was unable to afford his medications. In spring 2026, the center opened a new dispensary so patients can receive free prescriptions without ever having to leave the building. With easier access to his medications, the patient was able to lower his A1C and get his diabetes under control.

When patients no longer feel safe coming to the center, a critical lifeline is lost.

Kevin Murphy, DDS, director of volunteer dentists, says patients with diabetes are more likely to experience periodontal disease, which, if uncontrolled, can worsen their diabetes. In addition, he says it is not uncommon to see patients with active infections that require treatment.

"If there is a barrier to that care, it will impact their overall health," he says, adding that treating patients at the center helps keep them out of area emergency rooms.

The need for in-person care is demonstrated by one of Shah's patients, a woman in her 20s with two children whose husband–the family breadwinner–was deported. The patient has an autoimmune disorder that requires specialty care she can only receive through the center and its partnerships with Johns Hopkins Hospital. Now she must face the choice of pulling her children out of school and returning to her home country, where she will not have access to adequate healthcare, or staying in the United States without a breadwinner.

"I'm so happy we can provide the care she needs," says Shah, "but I'm so sad for the situation her family is in."

In response to the challenges patients face getting to the center, Esperanza is looking for additional ways to bring care and support closer to those who need it. Shah says she would love to have a mobile unit that could take healthcare directly into the community. In the meantime, the clinic is doubling down on the ways it can reach and support patients including use of telehealth.

Staff are also contacting people in their database to make sure they are up to date on routine cancer screenings and helping patients access medications through the onsite dispensary so they do not have to make an additional trip to a pharmacy. The center is also promoting a new behavioral health program through the Behavioral Health Equity Across Maryland program – a collaboration with Johns Hopkins that provides mental health care to immigrant patients who may be experiencing significant stress and trauma.

"I'm so happy we can provide the care she needs."

Despite these challenges, patient surveys continue to show that the center is a place where immigrants feel safe and where they can access care they could not get elsewhere.

We Do More TOGETHER

Partnerships are vital to the Esperanza Center's ability to serve Baltimore's immigrant community. Through our partnership with Johns Hopkins Medical Institute, dedicated staff and volunteers provide no-cost compassionate care to help ensure that everyone who comes through our doors is met with dignity, understanding, and the support they need.

With Gratitude
